

Copyright Policies

The copyright for all material published in the Pacific Review is held by the Regents of the University of California. In at least one issue it was indicated, in error, that the copyright was held by another party. This serves as the definitive statement on the matter: the copyright of The Pacific Review of Ethnomusicology is held by the Regents of the University of California and all rights are reserved, except as indicated below.

Fair Use

Fair use applies only to the citation of articles or passages from other published works for scholarly or review purposes. Please note that this does cover:

- quoting from an article or a review in a paper for a class
- quoting from an article or a review in a published work
- quoting from an article or a review in a review or bibliography

Provided, of course that the author receives credit as required by law and the code of academic honesty. The following uses are most certainly NOT covered, even if for personal, academic or noncommercial use:

- photocopying or otherwise duplicating an entire article or review
- circulating such photocopied material privately
- providing such photocopied material to your class
- including such material in a reader or other publication

Fair use is generally far more restrictive than most people, especially academics, seem to think. For any use outside of fair use, authorization in writing is required.
